Sudan's Al-Bashir heads to Saudi Arabia for pilgrimage

(Al-Arabia) Riyadh, KSA, 01/04/09 - President Al-Bashir arrived in Saudi Arabia today to perform Omra, a minor Muslim pilgrimage, which will take him to Islam's holy city of Mecca, state media reported.

Bashir arrived in the kingdom from Qatar, where he attended the Arab League summit this week. It was not immediately known if he would meet any Saudi officials seeing as Saudi King Abdullah Abdul Aziz and his foreign minister were in London for the G20 summit.

JEM rebels slam Arab support to Sudan's Bashir, pledge more action

(Sudan Tribune website) London, 31/03/09 – The JEM has denounced the support the Arab League has expressed for President Al-Bashir. "Qatar has tarnished its credibility by receiving Al-Bashir," said JEM Spokesperson Ahmed Hussein Adam.

Adam further said the Qatari officials "we are assessing the whole process and will take decisions allowing us to better defend the interests of Darfur people." He further described the warm welcome for Bashir in Doha and his designation as the concluding speaker of the summit as "an insult for the people of Darfur and peace lovers."

"And now they should not be surprised of any position that we adopt towards the peace process," he added.

Adam regretted that the Arab leaders didn't change their bad perception for the cause of Darfuri people. "They left the main issue and their major concern became how to save the oppressor (Al-Bashir)," he underscored. He also accused the Arab leaders of having a double standard and misleading words in their final communiqué.

The JEM Spokesperson also said he was frustrated by the statement made by the joint mediator, Djibril Bassolé before the UN Security Council on March 26. He said Bassolé's focus on the ICC decision as main hindrance for the peace process is not correct because the issue of justice should not be linked to the political process.

However, Presidential Advisor, Mustafa Osman Ismail, told the Qatari news agency that JEM would change its position and resume the suspended peace process when it realizes the impact of the Arab support and the ineffectiveness of the ICC arrest warrant.

UNICEF celebrates education in Southern Sudan

(Sudan Tribune website) Juba, 31/03/09 – The beginning of April marks a new school year and the fourth anniversary of Southern Sudan's 'Go To School' initiative, the UN Children's Fund (UNICEF) reminded in a statement today.

The initiative, launched on April 1, 2006, is led by the GoSS Ministry of Education, Science and Technology and aims to raise primary school enrolment levels to over two million.

So far, total enrolment is currently at approximately 1.6 million, up sharply from an estimated 343,000 at the end of the war, said UNICEF.

Minister of Education Job Dhoruai said: "The commitment of the Government of Southern Sudan and our partners offers us the strength to build a comprehensive education system that offers learning to all children who are the future of Southern Sudan."

Millions of school bags, books, pencils and other essential teaching and learning materials have been distributed by truck, boat and even on foot for communities that are often remote, with limited access.

Speaking ahead of the fourth anniversary commemoration, the Director of Operations for UNICEF's Southern Sudan Area Programme, Peter Crowley, said "Today, there is no more important priority than to enable the current generation of children to fully develop their talents and skills, so they can help put an end to the poverty and suffering that have afflicted Southern Sudan for so long, and build a better future for all."

In Southern Sudan, 36 per cent of children in schools are girls. During the war period, very few girls completed any primary education.

According to survey data from 2006, Southern Sudan had 2,922 schools, but only 16 percent had permanent buildings. Often, school is held under large trees. So UNICEF has helped build permanent classrooms and rehabilitate existing ones.

UNICEF has also supported the training of teachers in Southern Sudan, providing assistance to the development and implementation of an English-language based curriculum as well as ongoing intensive English language courses for teachers.

Denmark, Ireland, Japan and the Netherlands donate to promote the 'Go To School' initiative, as well as UNICEF National Committees in Germany, Italy, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States.
