Rights watchdog urges Sudan to deliver militia leader to ICC

(SudanTribune.com – 3 Oct. NEW YORK) Sudan should immediately surrender suspect Ali Kosheib to the International Criminal Court, Human Rights Watch said today. Sudan announced yesterday that it had released Kosheib from prison for lack of evidence.

On April 27, 2007, the International Criminal Court (ICC) issued an arrest warrant for “Janjaweed” leader Ali Kosheib for 51 counts of crimes against humanity and war crimes, including counts for rape, murder and persecution. At the time the warrants were issued, Kosheib was already in prison in Sudan on unrelated charges.

“Freeing one ICC suspect two weeks after awarding another suspect a plum government post demonstrates Khartoum’s blatant disregard for the Security Council resolution requiring cooperation with the court,” said Richard Dicker, director of Human Rights Watch’s International Justice Program. “It is now all the more imperative that Council members raise this with Sudanese officials.”

UN reports more hijacks of vehicles in Sudan’s Darfur

(SudanTribune.com – 3 Oct. KHARTOUM) The United Nations Mission in Sudan (UNMIS) reported on Wednesday that more vehicles of the UN agencies and international non-governmental organizations (INGO) had been hijacked in the war-torn western Sudanese region of Darfur.

Three armed men on Monday hijacked at gunpoint a UN vehicle in El Fasher, the capital of North Darfur State, according to the report.

The Sudanese police, who were notified of the incident, pursued the hijackers but their attempt to stop the vehicle was unsuccessful and efforts to recover the vehicle are still ongoing. A joint investigation is currently being conducted by the UN and AU into the attack, which has been strongly condemned by the international community.

UN envoy wants immediate ceasefire in Darfur

(\textit{SudanTribune.com} – 3 Oct. \textit{STOCKHOLM}) Groups in Sudan’s Darfur should cease hostilities now and not wait for peace talks at the end of the month after a weekend attack killed 10 peacekeepers, a United Nations negotiator said on Wednesday.

UN Sudan envoy Jan Eliasson said the attack, blamed on splinter groups from Darfur’s already divided rebel factions, should not be allowed to disrupt talks scheduled to begin in Libya on Oct. 27. Most parties have agreed to cease hostilities at the same time, but fighting continues.

"We cannot say it was a deliberate attempt to disrupt the talks but it was certainly a deliberate step to provoke negative developments," the former Swedish foreign minister told Reuters in a telephone interview hours before flying to Sudan.

"But we have to move forward with the talks and we will move forward with the talks. The world expects the parties to cease hostilities on October 27 and in fact after this terrible attack they should cease hostilities now."

Eliasson said it was still not entirely clear who was behind the assault on the African Union peacekeepers, who are due to be reinforced when their mission is absorbed into a much larger 26,000 member hybrid AU-UN force.

"There are some sources claiming this is renegade or small factions of a group not acting in the spirit of the leadership," he said. "We have noted that important leaders of the different rebel movements have condemned this terrible act and by that committed themselves to the talks and the process of finding a political solution."

Sudan security blocks US Carter meeting with Darfur refugees

(\textit{SudanTribune.com} – 3 Oct. \textit{KEBKABIYA, Sudan}) Former U.S. president Jimmy Carter confronted Sudanese security services on a visit to Darfur Wednesday, shouting "You don’t have the power to stop me!" at some who blocked him from meeting refugees of the conflict.
Carter, 83, wanted to visit a refugee camp in South Darfur but the UN mission in Sudan deemed that too dangerous. Instead, he agreed to fly to the World Food Program compound in the North Darfur town of Kabkabiya, where he was supposed to meet with refugees, many of whom were chased from their homes by militias and government forces.

But none of the refugees showed up and Carter decided to walk into the town, a volatile stronghold of the pro-government janjaweed militia, to meet refugees too frightened to attend the meeting at the compound. He was able to make it to a school where he met with one tribal representative and was preparing to go further into town when Sudanese security officers stopped him.

"You can’t go. It’s not on the program!” the local security chief, who only gave his first name as Omar, yelled at Carter, who is in Darfur as part of a delegation of respected international figures known as "The Elders." "We’re going to anyway!” an angry Carter retorted as a crowd began to gather. "You don’t have the power to stop me."

However, UN officials told Carter’s entourage the Sudanese state police could bar his way. Carter’s travelling companions, billionaire businessman Richard Branson and Graca Machel, the wife of former South African President Nelson Mandela, tried to ease his frustration and his Secret Service detail urged him to get into a car and leave.

"I’ll tell President Bashir about this," Carter said, referring to Sudanese President Omar al-Bashir.

Omar, the security chief, said Carter had already breached security once by walking to the school and would not be allowed to breach security again. "We are in the security field. We’re not that flexible," he said after the confrontation ended.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Carter later played down the encounter, saying the security chief was only doing his job.

"But it’s true that I’m not accustomed to people telling me I can’t walk down the street and meet people,” he told the AP after returning to a United Nations compound in El Fasher, the capital of North Darfur state. Branson said some refugees had slipped notes in his pockets.

"We (are) still suffering from the war as our girls are being raped on a daily basis,” read one of the notes, translated from Arabic, that Branson handed to the AP.

The note said that on Sept. 26, a group of girls had been raped and a refugee had been shot two days ago. Branson said it had been handed over by an ethnic African man.

For the most part, the refugees in Kabkabiya appeared too frightened to speak to the visiting delegation. Most of the community leaders the mission met during its two-day visit to Darfur appeared to be government-vetted, and several ethnic African delegates told AP they had been intimidated by authorities into turning down invitations from "the Elders."
"This illustrates the challenges that communities and humanitarian workers face in Darfur," said Orla Clinton, spokeswoman for the UN Mission in Sudan, who witnessed the incident.

Carter accused the international community with neglect for taking too long to mobilize over Darfur. "Because of Iraq, this crisis had been simmering at a lower level," he told the AP.

He also pledged to hold world powers to their pledge of ending the "crime against humanity."

Carter said the main goal of the three-day visit to Sudan was to seek guarantees for free and fair elections throughout the country in 2009.

Attorney: Judicial confessions by 23 suspects accused of sabotage attempt

Sudan’s FM slams Darfur campaigns

(SudanTribune.com – 3 Oct. UNITED NATIONS) Sudan’s foreign minister on Wednesday urged all rebel groups to join the upcoming peace talks on Darfur and called Western campaigns to aid Darfur "vicious," hostile and unfair.

In a speech to the U.N. General Assembly, Foreign Minister Lam Akol said Khartoum was complying with all international agreements and would abide by its unilateral cease-fire pledge when peace talks start in Tripoli, Libya, on Oct. 27.

But he said Sudan had been the target of "hostile, ill-intentional campaigns" from abroad aimed at exploiting the crisis in Darfur to serve their "well-known agendas and plans," an obvious reference to Western advocacy groups criticizing Sudanese army actions in Darfur.

"This vicious campaign targeted the policies of the country and its stance, and has strived to exaggerate and distort facts and to violate the country’s capabilities and the heritage and values of its people," Akol said.

The minister urged Darfur’s myriad rebel groups to stop warfare and join the "peace march without delay." He called on the international community to take "firm measures" against those who refuse to participate or obstruct the talks.

US opposes Sudan divestment bill

(SudanTribune.com – 3 Oct. WASHINGTON) A bill that would allow U.S. states to divest from companies doing business in Sudan could hurt international efforts to end the violence in war-torn Darfur, Bush administration officials told a Senate panel Wednesday.

The pending Senate bill aims to put economic pressure on Sudan to stop the violence in its western Darfur region, where an estimated 200,000 people have been killed since rebels took up arms against the government in 2003.

Jendayi Frazer, assistant secretary of state for African affairs, said the Bush administration was confident its sanctions were working and warned against legislative measures that might undo progress.

"We are concerned that some initiatives to increase economic pressure on Sudan will damage our relationship with our key partners rather than increase pressure in Khartoum," Frazer told the Senate Banking Committee hearing.

But several senators voiced support for the bill and said they would work to get it passed.
Sen. Sam Brownback of Kansas, a bill co-sponsor and Republican presidential candidate, said: "We have a responsibility to ensure that genocide does not continue on our watch or on our dime."

In July, the House overwhelmingly passed a bill that would protect investment managers who pull money out of key sectors in Sudan from lawsuits from disgruntled investors. It also calls on the U.S. government to list companies whose business in Sudan supports "genocidal practices."

The companion Senate bill would allow state or local governments to adopt measures to prohibit any investment of state assets in the Sudanese government or in any company with a qualifying business relationship with Sudan.

That bill has yet to move out of the Senate Banking Committee, a crucial step in the legislative process.

Sudan's envoy to UN terms resolution on attack on AU troops "positive"

(Sudanese TV on 3 October) [Presenter] The decision taken by the UN Security Council on the attack of the AU troops base came late and again did not clearly and directly condemn the movements that carried out the attack.

[Reporter] It came a bit late, but was finally issued. The UN Security Council statement that condemned what it termed dangerous attack on the AU Peacekeeping troops in Darfur in Haskanita in South eastern Darfur in which ten AU soldiers were killed and ten others injured.

The statement of UNSC called for more efforts to be made to identify those who carried out the attack and punish them.

[Foreign Ministry Spokesman] It is clear that the international community came out to condemn the Haskanita heinous attack. We in Sudan, as known to the viewers, we clearly condemned the issue from the first day, and we asked for identification and arrest of those who carried out the operation and taken to book.

[Reporter] Despite the clear evidences showing that some factions were behind the attacks, the [UNSC] statement did not mention it. An issue that led the Russian ambassador to UN to describe it as not strong as expected.

He told reporters that it was heard for some UNSC members to accuse a rebel movements.

Observers see the UNSC statement a change in the council dealing with the rebel movements, that was preceded by similar development in US, which is attributed by some to active diplomatic moves of Sudan government.

[Justice minister] this crisis could have not happened if the international community would have fulfilled its obligations in two fields.
The first one was to provide logistical, financial and technical support to AU troops to enable it to defend itself if attacked, this forces do not need to operate under section seven [of UN Charter] but only to defend themselves, a principal law in all laws.

[Reporter] Carrying out such an attack three weeks before the Tripoli talks, puts an eyebrows after expectations that the talks will be final. But Haskanita is expected to be the last nail on the so called Darfur issue's coffin.

We contacted via phone the Sudan representative to UN on this issue. We asked him about this view on the UN statement that did not clearly mention those who carried out the attack and about the countries that blocked the issue.

[Sudan representative to UN] Yes, as known, the UNSC hold meeting as requested by Ghana, which chairs the council this month, to discuss the attack on Haskanita. The council discussed the issue for two days and finally condemned the attack. It also sent condolence message to the countries of the victims. The council also reiterated its support for AU troops in Darfur and expressed regrets that the attack was carried out days before the Tripoli talks.

We describe the statement as positive compared to the situation at the UNSC. The condemnation was clear and the rebels attack on Haskanita was mentioned. The condemnation of those who carried out the attack was also clear. Some countries like USA and UK asked for more time to [word indistinct] but came the next day to join the other countries.

LRA peace team arrives today

(The New Vision – 3 Oct. Uganda ) LRA delegates will today make an unprecedented visit to the country, the first since the peace talks began in Juba, South Sudan, in July 2006.

The rebels’ spokesman, Godfrey Ayoo, said the chairman of the LRA delegation, Martin Ojul, will lead the six-man team to Kampala and the North.

“We will be coming to Uganda. I cannot tell you which route we will be using but we will be in Uganda tomorrow. The people of Uganda deserve to meet us,” Ayoo told The New Vision by telephone from Nairobi yesterday.

He added that Dr. Riek Machar, the chief mediator and Vice-President of South Sudan, might join them. “Some members of the mediation team will also be there so that we feel free and secure because they are the guarantors.”

South Sudan's information minister, Samson Kwajje, will reportedly be part of the visiting team.

According to Ayoo, the visit is intended to mobilise and sensitise people the LRA had scheduled to invite for its consultative conference at Rikwangba, on the Congo-South Sudan border.

For most delegates, who have been living in the Diaspora since the take-over by President Yoweri Museveni, it might be the first visit to Uganda in over two decades.

The president of South Sudan, Salva Kiir, on Tuesday confirmed the visit of the LRA team to Kampala.

“When Thursday the LRA delegation will travel to Kampala,” he told a group of visiting statesmen in Juba, led by South African Archbishop Desmond Tutu and former US President Jimmy Carter. Kiir said he was optimistic that a Comprehensive Peace Agreement would be signed “by the end of the year.”

China backs Sudan’s $300m Darfur payment

Financial Times FT.com, A $200m loan from China will form the bulk of a compensation payment the government of Sudan has pledged to make to the beleaguered Darfur region, according to former US president Jimmy Carter, who is visiting the country.

Mr Carter said on Wednesday that Omar al-Bashir, Sudan’s president, made the pledge during talks with him and other members of a visiting group of elder statesmen.

“He promised us there would be $300m (€212m, £147m) in all coming to the Darfur region in compensation: $100m coming from the government and $200m to be a loan from the Chinese,” Mr Carter was quoted as saying by Reuters.

Sudan’s foreign ministry was not able to confirm the pledge or provide any further details but an official announcement was expected on Wednesday night. China’s embassy in Khartoum was closed for a Chinese national holiday.

If the loan from China is provided specifically for compensation, it would mark a significant departure for a country whose financial support to African countries is normally provided for trade and infrastructure projects.

China, which imports large volumes of oil from Sudan, has previously received sharp criticism for obstructing attempts by the United Nations Security Council to try to quell the violence in Darfur. But following calls by some US activists for a boycott of next year’s Beijing Olympics over Darfur, China was credited with persuading the Khartoum government to accept a beefed-up UN/African Union peacekeeping force in the region.

The issue of compensation is likely to form a central part of peace talks between the government and several of Darfur’s fractious rebel groups, scheduled to start on October 27 in Libya.

As part of an unsuccessful peace agreement signed last year the government agreed to provide $30m of compensation. The funds have not yet been disbursed due to wrangling over who it will be distributed to: there are competing claims from different ethnic groups and areas of Darfur, as well as from the representatives of specific villages that have been destroyed and from individuals.

European troops headed to Darfur neighbors

(SudanTribune.com – 3 Oct. PARIS) About 3,000 European security forces could start deploying to Chad and Central African Republic next month to protect hundreds of thousands of refugees and other civilians caught up in the spillover from the Darfur conflict, French officials said.

The European forces are expected to start deploying at the beginning of November, becoming at least partially operational by the middle of the month, a French official said. The official said the operation would coincide with the start of the long-awaited deployment, expected this month, of a 26,000-member joint African Union-UN force in Darfur itself.

The joint AU-UN force was to absorb the 7,000-member AU force, which has long been seen as too small and weak to be effective.

Eastern and southern Chad also host some 450,000 internally displaced people and refugees from Darfur and Central African Republic, while 2,600 Darfurians have fled to northern Central African Republic, already home to more than 200,000 internally displaced people.

French efforts to ensure the troops come from all over Europe, with a non-French commander, are aimed at dispelling notions that the operation is really aimed at shoring up France’s interests in Africa, where it still wields considerable influence as a former colonial power.

Sweden, Poland and Belgium are offering between 100 to 200 troops each, one of the French officials said. Other contributing nations were not identified but could also supply troops, air power or other support.

Mediators at Darfur talks need patience - elder statesmen

(SudanTribune.com – 3 Oct. KHARTOUM) Mediators at Darfur peace talks will need patience and negotiators need to be more representative of the people of Sudan’s remote west, a group of elder statesmen said on Wednesday after visiting the region.

But peace in Darfur will be meaningless unless democratic elections, part of a separate north-south peace deal, go ahead as planned by 2009, they said.

"We hope that the participants will be patient, because this complex issue cannot be solved in a few days or in a few weeks," former U.S President Jimmy Carter told reporters.

He said many of the rebel groups, divided and numerous, did not represent the people of Darfur, who wanted peace, and said those members of civil society needed a voice at talks due to start on October 27 in Libya. "Some of these rebel groups have no constituency except their own bandit members but they are the ones so far who are being qualified to participate,” he said at the end of a three-day trip to Khartoum, south Sudan and Darfur.

Eight die in Darfur shoot-out

(\textit{SudanTribune.com – 3 Oct. KHARTOUM}) Eight people were killed in a shoot-out between Sudanese government forces and former rebels in the Darfur town of Nyala, a day before it was visited by Archbishop Desmond Tutu, officials said on Wednesday.

"The reports were that the fighting was between SLM Minni Minnawi and the government." She added it was unclear whether it was the police or the army that was involved on the government side. No one was available for comment from Sudan's armed forces.

PNC effort sends medical supplies to ravaged Darfur

\textit{Pittsburgh Post-Gazette} On April 10, a chartered plane packed with 25,000 pounds of emergency medical supplies landed in west Darfur, Sudan, one of the world's most dangerous places. The man responsible for the mission was PNC's William Demchak.

The vice chairman of Pittsburgh's largest bank is the organizing force behind the Darfur Project, a well-financed effort to assist with the genocidal conflict still raging in the western region of the Sudan.

With help from the Bridge Foundation, PNC and a list of other well-heeled Wall Street players are putting up millions to support eight private airlifts of essential drugs and medical relief over the next six months. The goal is to mitigate the effects of a crisis now responsible for the deaths of 200,000-400,000 people and the displacement of 2.5 million refugees, while raising public awareness and putting pressure on government officials to provide more assistance.

He told Akhbar Alyoum daily that the decisive factor in the coming round of talks would be the identification of the agenda that should be debated on.

He confirmed the necessity of the rapid deployment of the hybrid forces in Darfur in a bid to bring about stability in the area calling for continuation of the political dialogue.
