"President of south Sudan Salva Kiir is going to Khartoum tomorrow and there he will make a statement," said southern Information Minister Samson Kwaje.

Kwaje said they were rejoining the government to work through issues together, but added the SPLM still wanted to see progress by the third anniversary of the deal on January 9.

On SPLM decision to freeze participation in GoNU: Sudan President Bashir Hold Talks with Former Rebels

(VOA) The Vice President of Southern Sudan, Riek Machar says his meeting with President Omar al-Bashir was cordial and full of promise. This comes after former rebels of the Sudan People’s Liberation Movement’s (SPLM) pulled out of the unity government Sunday after complaining that President Bashir’s government has refused to abide by a comprehensive peace agreement (CPA) it signed with the ex-rebels that led to the end of a 20-year war and formation of the unity government. Machar said their pull out of the unity government was a strategic signal to President Bashir’s government about their unhappiness with its refusal to abide by the agreement.

He adds that first Vice President Salva Kiir is expected to arrive in Khartoum within the next 24 hours to hold talks with President Bashir to resolve the impasse. From the Southern Sudanese capital, Juba, Riek Machar tells reporter Peter Clottey that he believes President Bashir has the political will to resolve the impasse.

He said enumerated some of the issues his delegations presented to President Bashir.

Machar said he believes President Bashir could resolve the impasse without much consultation with the first vice president. “I personally feel that the president of the republic could act on most of these issues even without reference to first Lieutenant General Salva Kiir Mayardit who is the first vice president,” Machar said.

He denied their pull out of the unity government could have plunged the country into a full-scale war.

The Vice President of Southern Sudan, Riek Machar says his meeting with President Omar al-Bashir was cordial and full of promise. This comes after former rebels of the Sudan People's Liberation Movement's (SPLM) pulled out of the unity government Sunday after complaining that President Bashir's government has refused to abide by a comprehensive peace agreement (CPA) it signed with the ex-rebels that led to the end of a 20-year war and formation of the unity government. Machar said their pull out of the unity government was a strategic signal to President Bashir’s government about their unhappiness with its refusal to abide by the agreement.

He adds that first Vice President Salva Kiir is expected to arrive in Khartoum within the next 24 hours to hold talks with President Bashir to resolve the impasse. From the Southern Sudanese capital, Juba, Riek Machar tells reporter Peter Clottey that he believes President Bashir has the political will to resolve the impasse.

“It was a fruitful meeting. You would recall that on Sunday, I presented the interim political resolutions of the SPLM to the president through his minister for presidential affairs. Today we met and his request was that it would be good if the first vice president of the republic, Lieutenant General Salva Kiir Mayardit would come to Khartoum, and then they would resolve the issues. And according to him he felt that they could quietly work on these things,” Machar noted.

He said enumerated some of the issues his delegations presented to President Bashir.

“Well, basically it is our resolutions of the rule, which we broke down into four categories; the first category is six issues containing the non-implementation of the CPA. And in these are included the redeployment of Sudan armed forces from the two states in Southern Sudan, Unity state and Upper Nile state. Also, we discussed the issue of census, which is coming, the issue of borders, then the oil sector. These are within one category of non-implementation of the CPA. The second category was on violations pertaining to human rights, bill of rights, and arbitrary arrests of political leaders, including some of the political cadres of the SPLM. The third category was basically of the lack of inaction of affecting to reshuffle, which was requested by the first Vice President of the republic Lieutenant General Salva Kiir Mayardit,” he pointed out.

Machar said he believes President Bashir could resolve the impasse without much consultation with the first vice president.

“I personally feel that the president of the republic could act on most of these issues even without reference to first Lieutenant General Salva Kiir Mayardit who is the first vice president,” Machar said.
He denied their pull out of the unity government could have plunged the country into a full-scale war.

“We are committed to the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA). The action we did was a wakeup call. We decided that we would recall the ministers of the SPLM from the government of national unity, and that is the federal government excluding the state, so this by any means cannot bring about war, because I believe the two parties are committed to the CPA. But we must make sure that the CPA is implemented fully and correctly so that we could be engaged in national reconciliation and healing and prepare the whole country for the coming general elections,” he said.

Abel Alier to mediate between SPLM and NCP the ruling party

(Khartoum Monitor) Reports from Khartoum indicate that consultations are underway to tap the former First Vice President of Sudan Abel Alier as a mediator in the current crises between SPLM and NCP.

The daily AlSudani newspaper reported that some figures from southern Sudan are working on having Alier try to bridge the difference between SPLM and NCP. Several officials told AlSudani that Alier is a widely accepted figure with proven track record of resolving major issues such as those during the Naivasha talks leading to the CPA.

Kiir says NCP has grabbed his powers as thousands take to streets

(The Citizen) Thousands of residents went into Juba streets in support of the SPLM resolution to suspend participation in the GoNU as in Khartoum; President Bashir finally agreed to meet SPLM deputy Chairman Riek Machar.

The masses walked 8 kilometers around Juba town in a move to inform the 14 countries who witnessed the signing of the CPA in Nairobi two years ago that their mandate was not yet over.

Speaking to the massive crowd, Government of Southern Sudan President Salva Kiir said his powers in the unity government have been grabbed by the governing National Congress Party. “I have no job to do in Khartoum that is why I come and stay here” said Kiir.

Kiir defended his party’s resolution to suspend its participation from the Unity Government. “We will not go back to war. No body wants to go back to war” he said. He warns that if the NCP refused to implement the resolutions taken by the SPLM political Bureau, a supreme body of the SPLM, there would be no agreement.

Salva: We will continue with NCP up to referendum

(AlRai AlAam) FVP and President of GoSS and SPLM Salva Kiir said the SPLM will continue working with the NCP to the end, conducting a referendum on self-determination. SPLA Refuses Withdrawing From Al Dabab and Abu Tarig in S. Kordofan before February Next Year

(Alkahafo) The Political Commission for Cease-fire Co-Chairman Al Dirdiri Mohammed Ahmed said SPLA new timetable for withdrawing its troops from S. Kordofan and Darfur is considered a violation to commission's resolution determined in the presence of SPLM representative besides UN member.

Dirdiri said a SPLA allegation that it could not withdraw their troops because of the rainy season was “unjustifiable”. He explained that SPLA elements there are about some hundreds. He adds that armed forces have offered logistical support to complete withdrawing process like what happened in the east. But he said SPLA did not respond to the offer. Nevertheless Dirdiri said that they are waiting to hear from the UN on the SPLA violations.

However, political commission for ceasefire determined that SPLA shall withdraw forces from these two areas in a period of one week time.

Splinter Darfur rebels search for common ground

(Reuters – 16 Oct. JUBA) Representatives of seven Darfur rebel groups net in south Sudan, on Monday, try to reach a common negotiating position ahead of peace talks with the government.

Even as the meeting got under way, rebels’ leaders said some fighters were shifting allegiances.

Organizers of the meeting in Juba, capital of south Sudan, said rebels would have up to five days to find common ground. Some delegates in Juba told Reuters they were optimistic.

Thai troops to join UN peacekeeping mission in Darfur

Peoples Daily Thailand's Supreme Command Headquarters would send troops to join the United Nations and African Union peacekeeping mission in Darfur, Sudan from late this year, said a senior officer Tuesday.

The Thai troops would leave Thailand tentatively on Dec. 31, Palangkoon was quoted by Thai News Agency as saying.

The Thai military's task would cover protection of civilians, their buildings and facilities as well as ensuring free movement of staff working for the United Nations and humanitarian organizations, said Palangkoon. Chad declares state of emergency on Sudan border as 20 killed

Irish Examiner CHAD’S government yesterday declared a state of emergency along its eastern border with Sudan’s Darfur and in its remote desert to the north to tackle a flare-up of ethnic violence that killed at least 20 people.

The emergency periods, which will last 12 days, gives local governors powers to restrict movement of people and vehicles, meetings and media coverage in the eastern Ouaddai and Wadi Fira regions and an area known as the BET in the north.

The measures, which also gave authorities 24-hour search and arrest powers, came a day after European Union foreign ministers approved the deployment of a peacekeeping force of up to 3,000 European troops in eastern Chad in the coming weeks.

“In addition to the situation of war on the frontier with Sudan... we are seeing more and more murderous inter-community conflicts that bring bloodshed to certain regions of the country,” Communication Minister Hourmadji Moussa Doumgor said.

“The administrative and military authorities of the relevant regions must tackle this intolerable situation with all appropriate means,” he said in a statement.

President Idriss Deby’s government announced the move after at least 20 people were killed in recent ethnic clashes in the Wadi Fira region of eastern Chad following the desertion of a group of former rebels loyal to the defence minister.
The violence between the Tama and the Zaghawa communities broke out after an estimated 1,000 Tama fighters, ex-members of the former rebel group FUC (United Front for Democratic Change) who had been loyal to and served under Defence Minister Mahamat Nour, abandoned the eastern town of Guereda last week and moved close to the border.

I'm impersonated, says Darfur rebel commander

(The Citizen) Sudan Liberation Movement (SLM) Commander Abdalla Harran yesterday told the Citizen that an individual among the factions meeting in Juba Tuesday used his name and claimed to be a founder and Chairman of SLM/A.

Representatives of seven Darfur rebel groups met in south Sudan on Monday to try to reach a common negotiating position ahead of peace talks with the government.

The SLM/A Commander said someone called him from Khartoum, asking if he was in Juba because the person had been informed thus. “I’m in Jabal Marra” said Hassan. “What will take me to Juba since I am not part of Tripoli meeting?’

He accused some individuals saying “After they failed to bring genuine peace to Darfur they started using our names” Hassan said.

The SLM Commander said that the position of his group is crystal clear. Any meeting anywhere without providing security and cessations of hostilities is futile.
