(Sudan Tribune) The newly appointed joint UN and AU mediator for Darfur said on Wednesday he hoped to "strike a balance" in resolving the crisis in western Sudan.

"Of course, we hope to strike a balance. As one often says in an exercise of this kind, no one can win everything, but neither should anyone have to accept losing everything," Djibril Bassole told the state-run Burkina Faso daily Sidwaya the day after his nomination.

Bassole, who is Burkina Faso’s foreign minister, said in the same interview that he would first make contact with the various players in the crisis “to better understand” them and the situation and "identify the difficulties".

He said his mission would only be complete once a total peace agreement had been reached.

US will not interfere in ICC Darfur proceedings: Official

(Sudan Tribune) The US administration has no intention of pressing the International Criminal Court (ICC) to suspend a new case that will be initiated this month against unidentified Darfur war crimes suspects, a senior US official said today. "I want to emphasize this; the United States does not want to impinge in any way on the ICC prosecutor's discretion to go forward" Williamson said.

The US envoy repeated his disappointment with the UN over failure to deploy 3,600 more UN-African Union (UN) troops by end of June as requested by him in March. "We are disappointed the UN has not been able to achieve those modest goals by the date that has been set" Williamson said. "The progress in the first six months is absolutely unacceptable...The people of Darfur deserve better" he added.

On the other hand, US Charge d'Affaires Alberto Fernandez told Al-Sudani newspaper yesterday that resumption of dialogue with Sudan depends on resolution of Darfur crisis, implementation of CPA particularly Abyei.

Sudan accepts Congolese mediation to end conflict with Chad

(Sudan Tribune) Sudan accepts the Congolese mediation to end conflict with Chad, the declaration was made during a meeting between the visiting President Denis Sassou Nguesso and President Omer al-Bashir in Khartoum.

However Ambassador Khedr Haroun Director of the Department of bilateral regional relations at the foreign ministry said that Nguesso didn't elaborate the details of his mediation.

This announcement comes at a time where President Idris Deby told Radio France Internationale (RFI) that he had refused to meet al-Bashir on the sideline of the African summit in Egypt. The Burkina Faso president Blaise Compaore had tried to gather the two presidents in Charam El Sheikh.

"I don't need to meet (Sudanese President) Omar Hassan al-Bashir ... I'm for peace in this region, but I have no need to meet someone who has never kept his commitments," he said.

Sudan broke off diplomatic relations with Chad following an attack by the Justice and equality Movement on May 10 against the Sudanese government in Khartoum. Sudan accused Chad of providing the Darfur rebel group with money and logistical support to carry the raid.

Since 2004 the neighbouring Chad and Sudan trade accusations of supporting rebel groups against each other. Chadian factor in the five years conflict is designed by international responsible as new complication for the international efforts to end Darfur conflict.

President Denis Sassou Nguesso who was a supporter of the Chadian president in the past criticized his friend Deby after the May 10 coup. Western reports say he seems more convinced by the blames made by his father in law president Omar Bongo of Gabon against President Deby.

Sudanese and Congolese president agreed also to set up a resident diplomatic representation in the two countries. They also consented to reactivate trade and economic cooperation between them, starting by inviting businessmen from both countries to meet in Khartoum to discuss how to upgrade the economic and trade relations.

Ugandan army ready to pull out of south Sudan if Kiir demands – official (Sudan Tribune) Ugandan government said it would withdraw troops deployed in southern Sudan since 2002 to hunt the rebel Lord’s Resistance Army, if they receive formal demand from southern Sudan president.

Vice President of southern Sudan government told lawmakers at Juba parliament that Ugandan army is responsible of recent attacks in the border areas with Uganda. He further ordered the Ugandan troops who hunting the LRA rebels to leave the country.

Ugandan State Minister for Foreign Affairs, Henry Okello Oryem, said Uganda will not disobey Sudan’s request to leave her territory if they feel the UPDF is longer welcome, the Daily Monitor reported today.

"If we get official communication from President Salva Kiir who is the Commander-In-Chief, we are ready to leave. We are not going to disobey their request."

Oryem said in reaction to a statement by the South Sudan Vice-President, Riek Machar that UPDF should leave their territory to avoid "mistakes" as the soldiers hunt LRA rebels.

Machar said the decision was taken after the UPDF killed a South Sudanese businessman during anti-LRA operation this month. Since 2002, Sudan allowed the UPDF to pursue LRA fighters up to a limited area extending to a "red line", about 100 km north of the Uganda-Sudan border.

But the Sudanese ambassador, Sirajuddin Hamid Yousuf, said the protocol authorizing the UPDF to stay in Sudan expired in 2006 and it has since not been renewed.

"May be it is the same reason (expiry of protocol) that South Sudan is calling for the withdrawal of the Ugandan army," Yousuf said.

But Oryem said what is important is not the written agreement but the spirit between the two countries, which President Yoweri Museveni and South Sudan leader Salva Kiir enjoy.

Since 2002, Sudan allowed Ugandan forces up to 100km into southern Sudan to pursue LRA forces. The limit is near the town of Juba in southern Sudan.
